

2007 Annual Report

Vancouver

A Changing City

A quick glance around Vancouver can easily tell you that it's a city that's growing and changing everyday. Cranes crowd the skyline. Construction is happening above and below our streets. Our landscapes and skyline are going through a metamorphosis. Behind the infrastructural changes, we're also changing socially, economically and philosophically. We're looking for ways to make the city as livable as possible for all citizens. As the level of government that affects people's lives most on a daily basis, we're constantly looking at how we can meet the needs of our diverse population, and how we can do that in inclusive, sustainable, forward-thinking ways.

Letter from the Mayor

On behalf of my colleagues at City Council, I am pleased to present the 2007 Annual Report. Over the past year our government has delivered on many of the goals that we identified in last year's report.

Under Project Civil City, we are delivering historic investments in supportive housing to help homeless people in our community suffering from drug addiction and mental illness. This year, Council approved development on 12 City-owned sites that will deliver more than 1,100 additional units of social housing across the city.

We are working hard every day to prepare our city to host the 2010 Olympic and Paralympic Winter Games. The Olympic Village at Southeast False Creek and venue construction are proceeding well. The Canada Line and new Convention Centre are near completion. And we are implementing plans to ensure all citizens and neighbourhoods are included in the celebration.

To promote our environmental agenda, we approved aggressive targets to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and successfully encouraged the provincial government to approve a new rapid transit line to the University of British Columbia by 2020. We are greening Vancouver's taxi fleet and constructing a record number of new bike lanes.

And, to help make our economy one of the strongest in Canada, we have reduced tax rates for small businesses and supported significant investments in our arts and culture sector.

Our efforts are delivering results. Vancouver remains one of the best cities on earth to live. The economy is booming. Fewer people are relying on their cars to get around the city. Our relationship with the federal and provincial government is strong. Property and violent crime rates are down dramatically and we are turning the corner on homelessness.

2008 promises to be an even more exciting year. We will:

- expand the number of new police officers on the street by 2010
- accelerate new social housing projects
- implement our groundbreaking EcoDensity plan to protect the environment and increase housing options
- finalize more than $30 million in funding commitments from the federal government for drug treatment and mental health initiatives

- secure the future of BC Place and the Vancouver Art Gallery in our city for generations to come
- work to make Vancouver's transit system one of the most accessible in the world.

I want to thank all Councillors and City staff for their work over the past year. We have established a foundation for even more success in the future.

Sam Sullivan

Letter from the City Manager

The work we do everyday at the City of Vancouver is focussed on common goals. While we often talk generally about building and maintaining a livable city, how we achieve this depends on channelling our work through our basic objectives. We work to: establish an accessible and accountable city; bring civility to our streets and compassionate solutions to challenging social issues; create a strong local and regional economy; be a top destination for arts and culture; and be a world leader in environmental practices and sustainability. When we step back and look at our efforts, we can recognize that they are guided by these overarching goals. While 2007 was a difficult year interrupted by a long labour dispute, we still had significant accomplishments that contributed to our goals.

Council adopted the Supportive Housing Strategy, and the City continued to help provide non-market and low-income housing throughout Vancouver.

The Canada Line transit system, which will link our waterfront and downtown core to Richmond and the airport, is moving toward completion. By the end of 2007, all the City venues for the 2010 Olympic and Paralympic Winter Games were under construction and on schedule for completion.

311, the one-stop citizen information and service hotline set to begin in 2009, moved forward in its preparations.

We've developed a new Culture Plan that will serve as a guide for the City's ongoing and future role in arts and culture.

Our work in sustainability planning and outreach is paying off. The Climate Protection Progress Report showed that the City is already at five per cent below 1990 GHG emission levels and community emissions are one of the lowest per capita of major North American cities.

These are just some of the broad strokes of the body of work achieved by the City. The rest of this annual report will provide more insight into how we serve our citizens and keep our city livable.

Judy Rogers
City Manager

A City for Everyone

Inclusivity and accessibility are touchstones for how we build and run our city. Our programs, initiatives and investments are focused through the lenses of inclusivity and accessibility to provide the best support and services possible to all of our residents.

Housing

- In June 2007, Council adopted the Supportive Housing Strategy, which focuses on partnering with BC Housing and Vancouver Coastal Health to provide more safe and affordable housing for the homeless, along with help for tenants to stabilize their lives, enhance independent living skills, and re-connect with the community.
- The City and the Province of B.C. developed an innovative proposal in November to expedite up to 1,200 new social and supportive housing units on 12 City-owned sites. The City will lease the sites to non-profit operators for a nominal fee and each development that provides subsidized social and supportive housing will be exempt from property taxes. The provincial contribution will pay for pre-development costs. The partnership is part of the ongoing commitment to help break the cycle of homelessness.
- The City of Vancouver helped complete seven non-market or low-income housing projects with 332 units; facilitated 11 non-market or low-income housing projects with 872 units under construction; acquired two sites for social housing (Broadway and Fraser and Kingsway near Clark); and purchased the Drake Hotel in partnership with BC Housing.
- Council instituted "rate of change" measures to protect rental housing from development in areas throughout the city where there is a large stock of older affordable rental housing.

- The City's Non-Market Housing Operations continued to provide low-income, safe, clean, stable housing to socially and economically marginalized tenants in 856 units in 10 residential facilities.

Childcare

- Through its Social Planning department, the City helped open several new or renovated childcare facilities in 2007 including: Bayshore Gardens Children's Centre (49 spaces), Kitsilano Area Childcare Centre (25 spaces), Gingerbread House Day Care (25 spaces), Kids on Heather (69 spaces).

Diversity and Accessibility

- In 2007, the City of Vancouver became a part of the 10x10 Initiative, a provincial program to increase employment of people with disabilities by 10 per cent by 2010, and is developing a strategy to help meet the goal.
- The City implemented its Measuring Up initiative, a 2010 Legacies Now program by which communities assess the degree to which they are accessible and inclusive for people with disabilities and others. All City departments, as well as community members, have been involved in the process.

- Nine more on-street parking spaces reserved for people with disabilities were created in areas of high parking demand as part of the City's ongoing program to add disability parking spaces in Vancouver.
- 200 sidewalk ramps were installed on transit routes to provide greater accessibility to buses for people with disabilities and those who use mobility aids.
- Council approved free parking for veterans for the week of Remembrance Day as well as discounted parking at all City-owned parking lots for the month of November.

Diversity Events

In 2007, the City of Vancouver celebrated its diverse community with events marking:

Lunar New Year

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

International Women's Day

Youth Week

Aboriginal Day

Diwali

Cultural Harmony Awards

International Day of Disabled Persons

Diversity Day

Pride Week

Christmas

The Vancouver 2010 Olympic and Paralympic Winter Games

- To mark the three-year countdown to hosting the 2010 Winter Games, the City held a series of events to give everyone the chance to catch the spirit of the Games. The Countdown at the Coliseum provided citizens with a day of free ice skating, figure skating and short track speed skating demonstrations and entertainment. The Hillcrest Groundbreaking marked the official start of construction on the Vancouver Olympic/Paralympic Centre curling venue; and the Olympic and Paralympic flags outside City Hall were illuminated by newly installed lights that will highlight them in the night through the Games.

- In November, the City's Olympic and Paralympic Operations office held a public ideas fair to brainstorm fun, inclusive ways for neighbourhoods and communities to celebrate the 2010 Winter Games. An online survey was also launched to gather suggestions and ideas.
- Council approved "live sites" at David Lam Park and the former bus depot site, north of Georgia Street between Cambie and Beatty Streets. These sites will be hubs for public celebration and entertainment during the 2010 Winter Games.
- The City signed the Southeast False Creek Olympic Village Community Benefit Agreement with Millennium Properties, the City's development partner for the Olympic Village buildings. The agreement sets out the terms for an Olympic Village inner-city economic development program to provide 100 inner-city jobs, $15 million in inner-city procurement opportunities, and a $750,000 legacy fund for training and employment of inner-city residents to work on the Olympic Village project.

Building for the Future Remembering the Past

Vancouver continues to reshape and improve itself, changing and growing to meet the needs of our increasing population. However, the City also recognizes the importance of what came before and how our history contributes to who we are now as a city.

Major Projects

Several major projects that will significantly shape our city progressed in 2007.

- The Canada Line transit system, which will link the waterfront and downtown core to the Richmond and the Vancouver International Airport, is moving toward its 2009 completion date. Several sections of Cambie Street, the main road along which the line will run, have been restored. Plans are underway to put the finishing touches through the Cambie Village area.

- The first phase of development of Southeast False Creek, the last remaining large tract of undeveloped waterfront land in downtown Vancouver, was well underway in 2007. The excavation and shoring for the buildings that will serve as the Olympic Village during the 2010 Winter Games were completed by year end and the reconstruction of the shoreline and new seawall continued. After the Games, development of the Southeast False Creek lands will continue, with the area becoming home to a model sustainable community of up to 16,000 new residents.

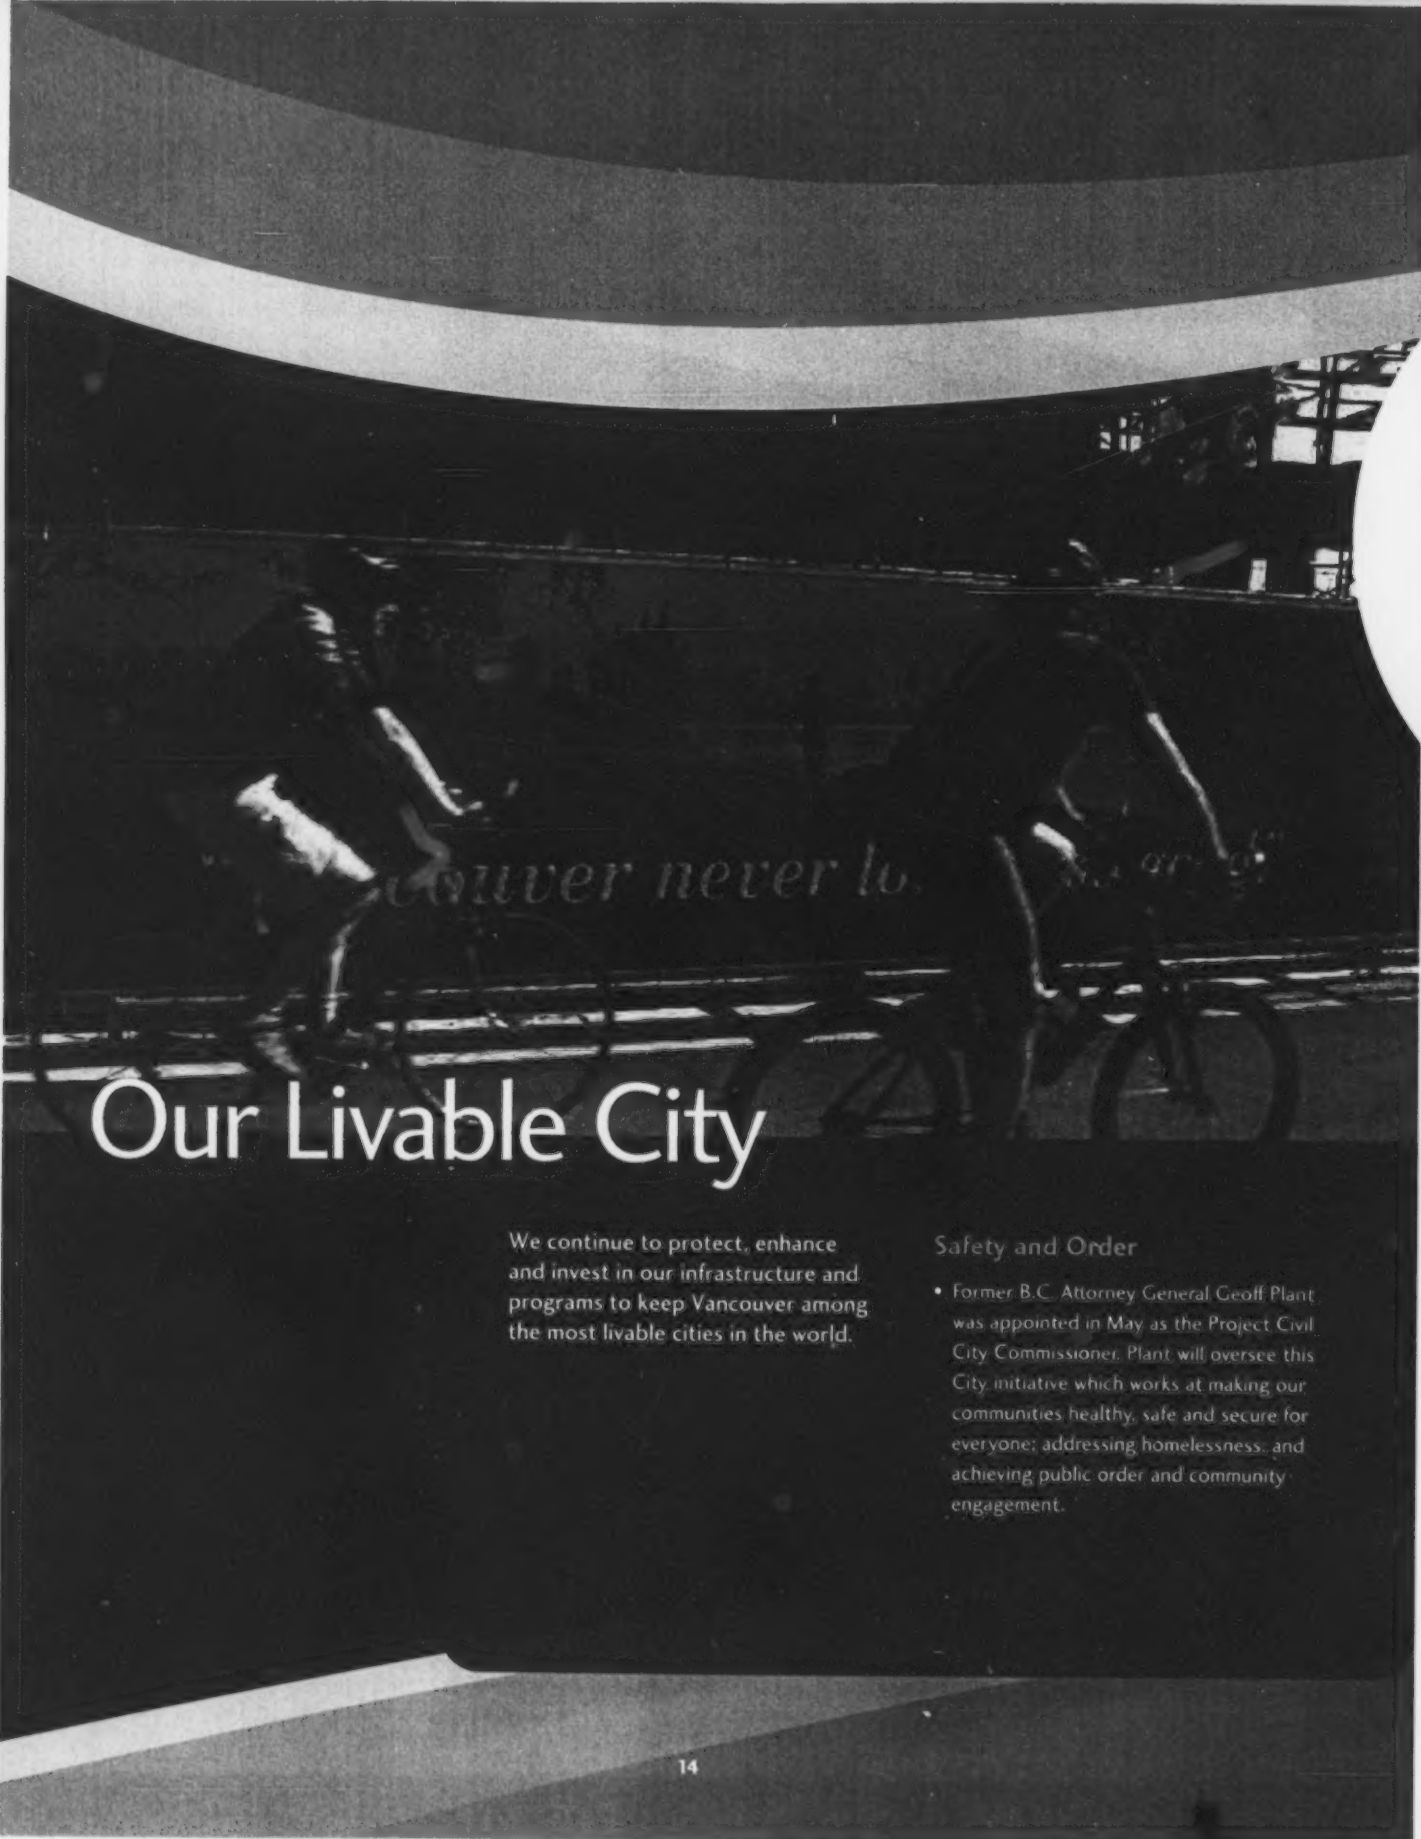

- In July 2007, City Council adopted the Issues and Directions Report for the Metropolitan Core Jobs and Economy Land Use Plan. The plan aims to ensure that enough development and transportation capacity exists to accommodate future job growth and economic activity in the Metro Core over the next 25 years. By planning for a healthy balance between jobs and residents, the Metro Core Plan contributes to the City's vision for an economically vibrant, livable and sustainable urban core.

Honouring History

- The City of Vancouver celebrated the 250th birthday of its founding father Captain George Vancouver with a celebration at the Vancouver Maritime Museum.
- Redevelopment of Mountain View Cemetery continued with the completion of a new operations yard and building in 2007. These are part of an overall master plan to construct three new buildings and 2,200 new spaces for cremated remains, and give local interment options to Vancouverites again for the first time in more than 20 years.

- Through an agreement with Veterans Affairs Canada, Mountain View Cemetery restored more than 275 markers at its Field of Honour military graves with proper foundations and new granite bases. The long-range goal is to restore more than 9,800 military grave markers at the cemetery.
- The City of Vancouver Archives scanned some 10,000 records, including photographs, documents and motion picture films, and made many of them available through the City website.

Our Livable City

We continue to protect, enhance and invest in our infrastructure and programs to keep Vancouver among the most livable cities in the world.

Safety and Order

- Former B.C. Attorney General Geoff Plant was appointed in May as the Project Civil City Commissioner. Plant will oversee this City initiative which works at making our communities healthy, safe and secure for everyone; addressing homelessness; and achieving public order and community engagement.

- In December, City Council supported the expansion of the Ambassador Program, an initiative of the Downtown Vancouver Business Improvement Area. The program involves street ambassadors who provide not only hospitality services, but address issues such as panhandling, litter, illegal vending, and graffiti. Council agreed to expand the program to 24-hour coverage and new areas through a shared funding model.

Streets and Traffic

The City's work on streets and traffic takes its lead from the priorities of our Transportation Plan which ranks walking, cycling, and public transit among our top priorities. We also continue to make upgrades and enhancements that keep our streets livable.

Walking

- As part of the City's implementation of a policy to enhance pedestrian environments, upgrades and reconstruction were completed on sidewalks, curbs, gutters on busy streets including: West Broadway, Expo Boulevard, Robson Street, East 7th Avenue, Ash Street, Hornby Street and Knight Street.
- The 2007 traffic signal program included the installation of 10 new pedestrian signals across the city. The installation of traffic management systems was completed at six major intersections: West Georgia and Denman; West Georgia and Nicola; Hastings and Renfrew; Hastings and Cassiar; Hastings and Boundary; and Granville and 70th Avenue.
- The comprehensive Main Street showcase project was completed. Upgrades to this busy pedestrian and transit corridor included: pedestrian and bus bulges at 18 intersections, two new pedestrian signals and a reconstructed wider sidewalk.
- The first block of the Carrall Street Greenway was constructed from Pender to Keefer Street. The route will complete a seawall loop around Downtown and Stanley Park; provide a pedestrian and cyclist-friendly transportation corridor; and serve as a catalyst for economic revitalization and community development in this area.

- The Tupper Neighbourhood Greenway, a pedestrian-oriented community space and pathway surrounded by the grounds of Sir Charles Tupper Secondary School, was completed. The greenway was developed as a community healing project after the death of a student on school grounds.

Cycling

- Council approved construction of 40 blocks of bike lanes on Cambie Street from Kent Avenue to 29th Avenue.
- Bike lanes on Dunsmuir, West 4th and West 49th Avenue were officially opened.
- The City of Vancouver's bicycle route maps were updated from the original 2005 version. Since then, more than 150,000 credit-card sized maps have been distributed.

Transit

- The Canada Line is scheduled to be finished by 2009 and add a transit capacity equivalent to 10 major road lanes to our city. The 19-km system will provide a needed link to the growing residential, business, health care, educational and other centres in the region through a sustainable mode of transportation.
- Traffic signal improvements, bus bulges, a new trolley fleet, and transit shelters were added to the Main Street corridor to improve transit flow and accessibility.

Livable Streets

- The City improved its street cleaning service with the introduction of an afternoon shift and weekend coverage for faster response to emergency cleanups and to provide services 24 hours a day, seven days a week.
- Keep Vancouver Spectacular, an annual neighbourhood cleanup program organized by the City, expanded in 2007 by 1,000 volunteers for a total of 13,000 volunteers who helped collect 6,000 bags of litter.
- The City opened two of eight planned automated public toilets in downtown Vancouver. Supplied by the City's street furniture contractor, the toilets are self-cleaning and available for use free of charge. The toilets address an increasing issue with urination and defecation in public areas downtown.
- In response to growing demands for short-term parking in the city, 143 new parking meters were installed.
- The City's Graffiti Management Program provided a legitimate outlet for graffiti writers and other artists through a one-day mural contest. Thirty artists, chosen through a public call, were invited to use the walls of a City-owned warehouse to create an outdoor mural gallery which remained after the event.
- With the help of the Canada/BC Infrastructure Program, the City completed two combined sewer overflow projects. The combined sewer system, which carries storm water and sanitary sewage in the same pipe, is being separated to eliminate overflows which can discharge untreated waste water into local waters.

Culture

Although it plays a behind-the-scenes role, the City is a key supporter of our creative community. We recognize culture is inextricable from our city's livability.

- In 2007, the City held its first Creative City Conversation, a forum on culture, creativity and community. More than 485 members of the arts community and public attended this event which was part of a larger consultation process conducted by the City's Creative City Task Force to help develop a long-term arts and culture strategic plan for Vancouver.
- The new Culture Plan for Vancouver, 2008 – 2018, was approved by Council in January 2008. The plan will guide the City's ongoing and future role in the creative sector. The core vision of the plan is to develop, enliven, enhance, and promote arts, culture, entertainment and diversity in Vancouver to benefit all sectors of our city.
- The City joined the Arts Partners in Creative Development program in 2007. This strategic investment partnership allowed the City to leverage a $500,000 contribution into a $6.5 million, three-year program that involves collaborating with the Government of BC, Canada Council for the Arts, Vancouver Foundation, the Vancouver Organizing Committee for the 2010 Olympic and Paralympic Winter Games, and 2010 Legacies Now to provide assistance to our arts and cultural organizations to create and develop new or existing works.
- The City completed the first phase in a multi-phased renovation of the Queen Elizabeth Theatre, the City's premiere performing arts venue.

Living Sustainably

A fundamental change is happening in Vancouver in every aspect of how we build our city. From planning and construction to corporate choices and community outreach, we're looking at how to reduce energy emissions and improve and protect our quality of life.

- The City's EcoDensity initiative, which is exploring how high quality and strategically located density can make Vancouver more sustainable, livable and affordable, completed its initial public process. From February to May, an EcoDensity fair, speaker series, and workshops gave citizens the chance to learn more and offer feedback. A draft charter and initial actions were created and referred to the public and Council in November.
- Council approved implementation of the Green Building Strategy, which reflects a long-term commitment to improving energy, water and material conservation, and indoor environmental quality in all new and retrofitted buildings constructed in Vancouver.
- Design began for the Southeast False Creek Community Energy Centre, which will capture waste heat from sewage to generate space heat and domestic hot water for the SEFC neighbourhood. Half of the distribution pipeline was completed for the first phase of the Neighbourhood Energy Utility development.
- Vancouver was named as the province's greenest large city with a population of 100,000 or more by the Province of B.C. The Green City Award recognizes Vancouver for the quality of its planning and programs which result in a livable and more sustainable city.
- Still Creek is one of only two remaining visible streams in urban Vancouver. Along with neighbouring municipalities, the City is working to revitalize sections of the creek to reduce flooding, reconnect people with the creek and its natural beauty, and improve long-standing environmental issues. In 2007, sections of the creek were widened and restored in the second project of a 10-year action plan.
- The City's Sustainability Group produced the Climate Protection Progress Report for Council, which identified that the City is already at five per cent below 1990 greenhouse gas (GHG) emission levels and is on track to meet a corporate GHG reduction target of 20 per cent below 1990 levels by 2010. The report also showed that community emissions are one of the lowest per capita of major North American cities and currently only five per cent above 1990 levels.
- The City has replaced regular diesel fuel used in its fleet with biodiesel blends containing bio-products to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.
- Our Sustainability Group teamed with BC Hydro and Terasen Gas to retrofit 720 Vancouver restaurants with efficient pre-rinse spray valves which save hot water and reduce energy consumption.
- The City's One Day One School pilot program was launched to promote active school trips. The program helps schools identify barriers to more active travel choices and then guides them in ways to reduce driving and increase walking, biking, riding the bus or using a carpool to get to school.

Serving Citizens Better

Vancouver's livability depends in part on not only the range of services we provide, but the quality as well. As an organization, we regularly assess how we're doing business and look for ways to better serve our citizens.

- 311, the one-stop citizen information and service hotline slated for launch in mid-2009, moved forward in its preparations. Staff developed the operational plan and analyzed the business processes of transferring to a 311 system. The 311 Contact Centre facility is under development. When it's in place, this centralized service will provide citizens with ready access via telephone to most City information and non-emergency services, 24 hours a day, seven days a week, in multiple languages.

- The City rolled out a new bylaw website to improve public access to bylaws. More than 2,000 electronic versions of bylaws were put online, and a new search engine was added to the bylaw website.

Vancouver Board of Parks and Recreation

Our city's exceptional parks and recreation system is one of the most significant measures of how well residents are being served.

Our many and varied recreation programs, delivered directly and through partners, contribute to healthy communities and to a healthy environment and economy for the city. By providing these amenities, the Park Board serves as the champion of personal and community well-being, connecting neighbours, improving the natural landscape and keeping lives in balance.

The last year was marked by the major impacts of the storms in late 2006 and early 2007 and the summer-long labour disruption. Despite this, the Park Board made significant progress on delivering new and improved parks and recreation services to residents.

Healthy Residents, Healthy Communities

- The Vancouver Active Communities program was substantially expanded with new initiatives to inform, inspire and equip residents and help them become 20 per cent more physically active by 2010.
- New scanable Flexi Passes and 10-visit cards with photo ID were introduced for pools and fitness centres, providing faster service and quicker renewals.

- Stanley Park's Ted and Mary Greig Rhododendron Garden database was completed, with self-guided walking tours developed and posted on the website.
- Fifteen open houses and workshops were hosted to give residents an opportunity to review and provide input into concepts, designs and plans for park and facility projects.
- New naming rights and commemorative naming policies were approved, providing guidelines and a decision-making framework for naming Park Board facilities.
- A new process around naming parks was finalized to provide greater consistency and more public input.
- More than a dozen community projects were funded under the Neighbourhood Matching Fund.

Renewing Our Parks and Facilities

- A new Sunset Community Centre was opened to the public at year end, replacing one of the oldest centres in the city. The dramatic "green" building with unique landscaping features was relocated to Main Street.
- Extensive plaza renovations were completed at the top of Queen Elizabeth Park including the Celebration Pavilion, sculpture, fountains, and Tai Chi arbours.
- A major refurbishment of the historic children's playground at Ceperley Meadow in Stanley Park was made possible through the Air India Memorial project, which was funded by the federal government. The memorial and playground were unveiled in July.

- Ongoing use of the Downtown Skate Plaza was approved, following a two-year trial for the popular street-style skate board park.
- A 25-year lease was approved for the Stadium in Nat Bailey Park, which includes a $5-million restoration of the historic baseball facility.
- East Vancouver's redeveloped Pandora Park was officially opened with new walkways, seating, play areas and drainage.
- Two small green spaces were added to the Vancouver park inventory – in Yaletown at Mainland and Nelson, and in Marpole at 72nd Avenue and Osler Street.
- Neighbourhood park upgrades significantly improved Nelson and Victoria Parks, and the Oak and 37th park site.

- The Lost Lagoon bicycle path was reconstructed to improve pedestrian and cyclist safety in Stanley Park.
- Playgrounds were renovated or replaced in George, Bobolink, Victoria, and Rupert Parks to better serve families. New playgrounds were added to Coopers' Park Extension, and Nelson, Stanley, and 72nd and Osler Parks.

Planning Today for Tomorrow: Sustainability

- With community partners and thousands of volunteers, the Park Board marked the annual Earth Day events in Everett Crowley, Jericho and Hastings Parks.
- A shoreline protection project was completed at East Vancouver's New Brighton Park to control major erosion.

Being Financially Responsible: Accountability and Enterprise

- A successful fundraising and development program raised just under $1 million through donations.
- Special project funding was received from a number of major gifts, including the Red Fox program to support aboriginal women's wellness and a donation towards refurbishing the Kits Beach basketball court.

Special Project: Stanley Park Restoration

- The restoration of Vancouver's beloved Stanley Park was one of 2007's signature renewal projects. Gale-force wind storms in late 2006 and early 2007 toppled more than 10,000 trees in Vancouver's first and largest park, and caused severe damage.
- The Park Board responded quickly with a redirection of resources, focusing immediate efforts on restoring access to roads, park facilities and services. An ambitious restoration plan was prepared by a team of staff, consultants and volunteers and with extensive public consultation. The plan would not have been possible without significant financial and in-kind contributions, with $9.5 million pledged from the three levels of government and more than 7,000 corporate and private donors.

- One of the goals of the restoration was to create supporting legacies that will sustain and support Stanley Park for future generations. These include setting aside a damaged area as a demonstration site; the development of historical, cultural, and interpretive signage; creating a new long-term forest management plan and an ongoing forest maintenance fund for continued restoration work through revenues from the sale of a portion of the fallen trees.
- Significant progress was made in 2007 with the park well on its way to being assessed, cleaned up and renewed by year end. Completed work included: clearing of blow-down areas; removal of debris; distribution of fallen trees; preparation of a new protection strategy; reopening roads and trails; assessing and mapping the park; stabilizing damaged cliffs and slopes; reopening the seawall; and replanting the forest and planting new materials.

Fire and Rescue Services

Vancouver Fire and Rescue Services (VFRS) is dedicated to protecting lives, property and the environment in our city. The department plays many important roles, from responding to fires and life-threatening situations to providing community outreach and education. VFRS continues to update its skills and equipment and foster strong partnerships to provide the best services possible to Vancouver's citizens.

Training and partnerships

- In 2007, members of the department worked with Canada Line planners on various access issues in regards to the construction of the line to prepare the department for emergencies that may occur once the line goes into service.
- Members of the Hazardous Materials Team took part in an advanced clandestine lab training course in Washington State to learn more about dealing with illegal drug labs. As well, members conducted advanced training for responses to radiation events.
- VFRS Special Operations division partnered with Vancouver Coastal Health and Providence Health to provide "decon" response to Vancouver General UBC and St. Paul's Hospital in the event of a mass casualty incident requiring decontamination of patients.
- The department conducted tactical inspections on over 38 construction sites, entering rescue agreements with various construction companies.
- In 2007, Vancouver Firefighters Community CPR team entered into a partnership with the Canadian Red Cross to become an associate provider of their programs.

Community Services – Emergency Preparedness

In 2007, VFRS provided the following for the community:

- Emergency preparedness public education courses: 62 classes, 3,069 attendees
- Neighbourhood Emergency Preparedness Program: four classes, 100 attendees
- Emergency Response Team training: two classes, 37 attendees
- Community fairs: two fairs; 200 attendees
- Emergency preparedness exercises: eight exercises, 150 volunteers

Improving and upgrading equipment

- VFRS received 13 new pumper engines, equipped with compressed air foam capability that will enhance fire fighting tactics. They also received two 125-foot aerials; two hazmat vehicles; and one air and light support unit.
- The fireboat program completed the installation of a new radar system on all five boats. Fireboat #4 underwent a major refit with a hull restoration, and rebuilding of the engine, Hamilton jets, and fire pumps.

- The Emergency Medical Services division replaced all its external defibrillators in 2007, coinciding with the implementation of new guidelines on CPR and AED use.

Police Department

The Vancouver Police Department (VPD) provides professional and effective community-based policing through partnerships focusing on prevention, enforcement, and investigative and problem solving strategies. The VPD serves and protects our citizens and works to find new and improved ways to do so.

New Leader

In 2007, the Vancouver Police Department saw a change of command from retiring Chief Constable Jamie Graham to incoming Chief Constable Jim Chu. Chief Constable Chu began his policing career with the VPD in 1979.

Con Air

Chief Chu launched a public safety initiative that had been started by his predecessor. Popularly dubbed Con Air, it involved rounding up criminals who had fled to Vancouver to escape prosecution and sending them back to face the charges in the jurisdictions where they committed their crimes. The program has been successful and continues in Vancouver. It is also being studied in other cities.

Auto Theft Prevention Program

Late in 2007, the department unveiled a major crime prevention program aimed at reducing theft from autos. A television public service announcement reminded motorists that "If you leave it, thieves won't." The six-week campaign resulted in the largest one-month drop in theft-from-auto statistics in the department's history.

Operational Review

In 2007, the Planning, Research and Audit Section completed an operational review of all administrative and operational processes within the VPD. The goal was to identify methods to maximize efficiencies of existing human resources across the department; determine shortcomings in comparison to industry best practices standards; and identify the additional resources required to attain those standards. This comprehensive analysis involved five separate studies and generated two reports. The project team developed numerous cutting-edge theoretical models and programs, many unique in the field of organizational analysis. The operational review played a major role in City Council's decision to increase the VPD's authorized strength by 194 sworn and 95 civilian positions. In addition, the methods and programs developed by the project team have generated, and will continue to generate, substantial efficiencies across the department.

Recruiting

Hiring new members continues to be a major challenge for the department in a time when unemployment has never been lower and departmental standards have never been higher. The department has initiated a number of non-traditional strategies to meet the challenge. Under the banner of "Operation Search and Employ", the department has extended its recruiting campaign province-wide and across western Canada. The VPD was the first police force to put a recruiting session on the virtual Internet world of Second Life.

Vancouver Public Library

The Vancouver Public Library is the third largest public library system in Canada with more than 10 million items borrowed annually. With a landmark Central Library, 20 branches and collections available in 16 languages and numerous formats, Vancouver citizens are well served, including home-bound patrons who access Outreach Services.

Upgraded website

Throughout 2007, Vancouver Public Library renovated one of its busiest branches – its website at vpl.ca. The renovation was undertaken with busy users in mind. The updated site lets citizens read newspapers or magazines from around the world, renew or reserve a book or DVD or find out about the week's library events, turning their computers into personal branch libraries. It also provides a live online information service, and access to InfoAction, the VPL's fee-based information and research centre.

Get Carded!

By Grade 9, students increasingly rely on electronic resources and information for their assignments. The Get Carded! program visits schools and introduces Grade 9 students to online search tips as well as the wealth of commercial databases and other Internet services available through Vancouver Public Library. A teen librarian explains how students can get a card and provides a one-hour multimedia presentation. By 2007, approximately half of Vancouver's Grade 9 students got carded and the popular program continues.

Outreach Services

Home delivery service for patrons who can't visit library branches and monthly deliveries of library materials to seniors' care homes are just two ways VPL ensures all Vancouver residents can access the library. VPL librarians also regularly present book talks and information about programs and services at community centres and to seniors groups across the city. The Outreach collection includes: fiction and non-fiction large-print books; digital and cassette talking books; videos of films and TV shows with voice-overs describing the visual elements for those who are blind or have low vision; and BiFolkal multi-sensory kits that contain songbooks, pictures and other materials for reminiscence programs for seniors to stimulate discussion.

Vancouver Verse

Along with the City of Vancouver and the Vancouver International Writers Festival, VPL is a partner in Vancouver's Poet Laureate program. Working with the City's inaugural Poet Laureate George McWhirter, staff created Vancouver Verse, the program's official website at www.vancouververse.ca. Poetry aficionados who visit the site learn how to submit poems for A Verse Map of Vancouver, an anthology to be edited by Mr. McWhirter.
